

I'm not robot  reCAPTCHA

Continue

To rip someone off meaning

Idiom: to rip off (verb), a rip-off (noun) - to steal something from another person; to cheat or trick someone into spending more money on a product than what it is worth. Context #1 – Friends are taking a tour of Los Angeles
Dan: Let’s go see the Hollywood sign next, but don’t leave your bag in the car.
Juan: Really? Why not?
Dan: Because there are thieves at popular sites who often rip off tourists who are not careful with their bags and belongings.
Juan: Oh, I see. That happens sometimes in my country, especially in areas where there are a lot of tourists.
Dan: Yes, so be careful. If someone rips us off, then we will really be in trouble!
Context #2 – Two friends are talking about buying a car
Sami: I saw an advertisement for a new car. It’s so cheap, so I really need to get to that dealership to buy it now!
Petra: Sami, do you really believe that? It’s too good to be true. Those car dealerships rip everyone off.
Sami: Really? But they can’t lie to people. That’s terrible.
Petra: They put up those advertisements to get people to go to the dealership. Then, they say unfortunately that ‘good deal’ is no longer available. They are very tricky. Then they will pressure you into paying a lot more for a car than what it is really worth.
Sami: What a rip-off!! That’s outrageous.
Petra: Yes, it is. You are better off knowing the full market value and shopping around at many different places. Then, hopefully, you won’t get ripped off like so many customers.
Sami: That sounds like a plan!
Meaning: To rip off is a verb and a ‘rip-off’ is a noun. This idiom means to steal something or to purposely deceive or trick someone into paying more for a product than what is necessary. In context 1, two friends are touring Los Angeles and are afraid that if they leave their bags in the car, a thief will ‘rip them off’ or steal their bags. In context 2, Sami sees a really good advertisement for a car, but Petra warns him that the car dealership may be trying to ‘rip him off’ by getting him to go there through false advertising. Visit our website: languagesystems.edu I would like to know the difference between these two terms, and whether they are interchangeable or not. Here are two examples that have the same meaning for me: ‘Someone has ripped out the first three pages of this book.’ ‘I will rip your head off!’ ‘Rip’ implies to say that someone is going to tear something off. Since both sentences are talking about something being tore off, for instance: Someone ripped my head off, but not only ripped it and made a wound, but also cut it off my neck, it means my neck no longer has a head, it was cut off. So, ‘out’ and ‘off’ implies to say the same thing, why then are there two forms? Do they have different meanings? For instance ‘rip off’ means ripping something off savagely, while ‘rip out’ means ripping something off not so savagely? Or ‘rip off’ doesn’t mean ‘cut my head off my neck’ but means only make a wound, while ‘rip out’ means to cut my head off? Could anyone explain me the difference between them and tell me whether they are interchangeable or not? For other uses, see rip off (disambiguation). This article does not cite any sources. Please help improve this article by adding citations to reliable sources. Unourced material may be challenged and removed.Find sources: "Ripoff" - news - newspapers - books - scholar - JSTOR (January 2007) (Learn how and when to remove this template message)
Look up rip off in Wiktionary, the free dictionary.
A ripoff (or rip-off) is a bad financial transaction. Usually it refers to an incident in which a person is overcharged for something, or receives goods or services not of the standard expected for the price. A ripoff is usually distinguished from a scam in that a scam involves wrongdoing such as a fraud; a ripoff may be considered excessive, but not illegal. Alternative uses This section may contain material unrelated or insufficiently related to its topic. Please help improve this section or discuss this issue on the talk page. (January 2020) (Learn how and when to remove this template message)
Love ripoff In a related meaning, a ripoff is an obviously blatant or unscrupulous copy or fake imitation.[citation needed] This is also known as a knockoff. One example is the 1988 movie Mac and Me, widely seen as a ripoff of Steven Spielberg's E.T. the Extra-Terrestrial.[citation needed] In South Africa 'ripping off' can be making a joke of something that a person does on a regular basis;[citation needed] see running gag. Another related term is "ripping on" or "rip on" something; used to describe humorous verbal abuse directed towards a person, thing or concept.[citation needed] Ripping on something is typically light-hearted, but can also be cruel in nature just like any type of putdown. In musical terminology, 'ripping off' is a light form of plagiarism, as in 'borrowing' an established riff, phrase or idea from a musician or song.[citation needed] When musicians use the term among themselves, they are referring to the context of 'quoting' their influences and incorporating the licks into their personal style. See also Wikivoyage has a travel guide for Common scams. Rip-off Britain Spin-off Knock-off Mockbuster References Retrieved from " A rip-off is something or a situation in which the customer paid too much. The customer also regrets paying the money. If I buy something and describe it as a rip-off, I am saying that I paid far too much. It could also mean that I did not get what I expected. The term can mean a swindle, fraud, or scam, but is usually less serious than those three words. We may refer to an inferior imitation of something as a rip-off. We can write the noun as one word or two words with a hyphen. In other words, we can write a 'ripoff' or 'a rip-off.' It is possible but less common, to write the noun as two words with no hyphen. When we use the term as a verb, we place the object, if it is a pronoun, in between the words 'rip' and 'off.' For example, they ripped him off, he ripped me off, she ripped them off. The Cambridge Dictionary has the following definitions of the term:
1. Something that is not worth what you pay for it.
2. Something that costs more than it is worth.
3. A cheap or bad imitation of something.
4. An act of cheating someone by charging too much or not giving anything of value for money spent." If you went to an expensive hairdresser and hated your haircut, you might describe it as a rip-off. Etymology of rip-off Etymology is the study of where words came from, i.e., the origin of words. It is also the study of how the meanings of words have evolved. The term 'to rip off', an African-American vernacular, emerged circa 1967, says etymonline.com. In 1969, the noun emerged with the meaning 'a swindle, act of fraud.' Since 1904, in the United States, 'to rip' has been prison slang meaning 'to steal.' People also used it with this sense in the twelfth century. In 1972, the term acquired the meaning 'an exploitative imitation.' Rip-off vs. scam or con Although the three words have very similar meanings, there is a difference. A scam or con involves wrongdoing. In other words, doing something that is illegal. Fraud, for example, may be a scam. A rip-off is not nice, it may be excessive, and you may have paid too much. However, it is not illegal. In musical terminology Regarding the term's meaning in the world of music, Wikipedia says the following: "In musical terminology Ripping Off is a light form of plagiarism, as in 'borrowing' an established riff, phrase or idea from a musician or song." "When musicians use the term among themselves they are referring to the context of 'quoting' their influences and incorporating the licks into their personal style." Rip-off Britain Britons often complain that cars, computers, and residential property are much more expensive in the UK than elsewhere. Especially compared to the United States. The expression 'rip-off Britain' refers to this phenomenon. The tabloid press has been using the term since the late 1990s. The UK's Consumers' Association hired a stand at the British International Motor Show in 1999. Nobody knew, until the show opened, that it had hired the stand to highlight high British car prices. The Society of Motor Manufacturers and Traders decided not to eject the Consumers' Association. The term 'rip-off Britain,' which was already beginning to become popular, subsequently took hold in the mass media in a big way. Online rip-off Since the 1990s, when the Internet started becoming popular, online shopping and e-commerce took off. Online shopping refers to purchasing things on the Internet. In most cases, you pay with your credit or debit card and the goods are delivered to you. E-commerce means doing business online. Wherever there is shopping or commerce, there are always rip-offs. In some ways, the risk is greater online. We never see the seller or have the opportunity to test or try on the product when we buy online. Therefore, if we have a complaint, we are very much at the mercy of the seller's honesty.
1 b [no object] : to become torn or split
Her coat ripped when it caught on the doorknob.
3 [no object] : to go or move very quickly through or into something
The fire ripped through the forest, an epidemic that ripped through the region
The bullet ripped into her leg.
4 [+ object] : to criticize (someone or something) in a very harsh or angry way (US)
The coach ripped [=ripped into] his team for their sloppy play.
His latest movie was ripped to shreds/pieces by the critics.
let rip informal 1 : to do something in a way that is full of anger or energy
For the concert finale, the band let rip with a fantastic version of the song that made them famous.
I don't think anyone expected the senator to let rip at the press conference like that.
[=to speak in such an angry way]
2 let (something) rip : to make (a car, boat, machine, etc.) go very fast — usually used in phrases like let it rip and let her'er rip
Once we got the boat out into the open water, we let it rip.
rip apart [phrasal verb]
1 rip (something) apart or rip apart (something) : to completely destroy (something) by tearing it into pieces
The child ripped the toy apart.
Strong winds had ripped apart many of the little beach bungalows. — often used figuratively a tragedy/scandal that almost ripped the family apart
2 rip (someone or something) apart or rip apart (someone or something) : to criticize (someone or something) in a very harsh or angry way especially by describing weaknesses, flaws, etc.
Critics ripped the author's latest novel apart.
an article that rips apart the mayor's plan rip into [phrasal verb]
rip into (someone or something) : to criticize (someone or something) in a very harsh or angry way
The coach ripped into [=tore into] the team after the game.
She ripped into the band's last performance.
rip off [phrasal verb] informal
1 rip (someone) off or rip off (someone) : to steal from or cheat (someone)
Hundreds of people were ripped off in a scam involving two people who claimed to be collecting money for disaster victims.
The store had been ripping customers off for years.
I wasn't trying to rip you off. I thought $50 was a fair price.
2 rip (something) off or rip off (something) a : to steal (something)
The organization's treasurer ripped off almost $6,000 before being caught.
Somebody ripped off [=stole] all our equipment.
b [disapproving] : to copy or imitate (something) improperly ; to make something that is too much like (something made by someone else)
The film has done well, but its makers have been accused of ripping off another movie made 30 years ago. — see also rip-off rip up [phrasal verb] rip (something) up or rip up (something) : to completely destroy (something) by tearing it into pieces to rip someone off meaning in english. what does it mean to rip someone off. how to rip someone off